Delving into archival material at the ETH in Zurich, 2010, Evangeline discovered the map of Jung's highly significant journey to India undertaken in 1937-8--a discovery that surprised even Mr. Hoerni, Jung's grandson. Jung travelled east by boat with over one hundred scientists connected with the British Association for the Advancement of Science. It wasn't until 2012 that Evangeline more fully realized that Jung's journey overlapped with specific details of her parents' life. As a result, Jung's 5,000 mile train journey around India and Ceylon accrued deepening interest to Evangeline, who was born and raised in India, both before and after Independence in 1947. These fortuitous discoveries led to the writing of A Jasmine Journey (2013). (Available through Amazon.) Jung's epic journey will be outlined in Part I of the evening presentation.

During the last ten years Evangeline has continued to explore a minute jewel that was also discovered in Jung's archival treasure house, a tangible hint of Jung's visit to a particular family and their textile business in South India close to the great temple of Meenakshi, the ancient fish-eyed goddess. With her own life-long interest in and engagement with fabric arts, this museum discovery resulted in five further journeys, firstly to visit this family and then to delve more deeply into the 'soul of India' -- the incredible fabrics that have woven and coloured India's politics, history, culture, spirituality (and our carbon footprints). The second part of the evening will introduce, with rich photographic material, Evangeline's latest research regarding places that Jung visited and the related developments which are woven into his most mature works by which he toasted the birth of the 'new and ancient woman', the voice of the poetic tradition, the poetry of what we do. (The physicist Wolfgang Pauli was also deeply affected by his own visit to India and he will be mentioned.) These diamond works of Jung's in particular were further forged and burnished during the Second World War, taking us deeply into explorations of resilience during times of crisis. Evangeline's latest book, will be introduced: C.G. Jung as artisan: cross-connections with India Considerations in time of crisis.
